MYSTERIOUS DEATH

Two Popular Young People—Expired Side by Side on

EVE OF THEIR MARRIAGE

Poisoned Chewing Gum One Theory of the Dual Tragedy—May Have Been Murder.

On the eve of their wedding, with every arrangement perfected, the ring purchased, the bride's wedding dress finished, the dead bodies of Miss Grace Blosser and Charles E. Twigg were found on a settee, in a sitting posture, in the parlor of the Blosser home in South Cumberland Saturday afternoon, by Mrs. L. F. Blosser, mother of the prospective bride. They sat side by side, with heads sunk on their breasts, as if asleep.

An autopsy conducted by Cumberland physicians showed that cyanide poisoning caused the death of the couple, but whether taken with suicidal intent or administered by a third person, is as yet unknown. Nothing could be found in the room where the bodies were discovered that gave any evidence how the deadly poison had been taken, except some chewing gum that was in Mr. Twigg's mouth.

One theory advanced by the authorities is that the poison was in the chewing gum, put there by Twigg, and given to Miss Blosser by him, and after it had executed its deadly work, he removed the gum from the young woman's mouth and put it in his own.

The respective families and friends of both parties scoff at the suicide theory, and believe they were murdered.

Twigg was engaged in the grocery business at Keyser, and was also an extensive fruit grower. Miss Blosser was about 28 years old, and had been married before to Maurice F. Williams of Flintstone, Md., but their marriage proved unhappy and a divorce three years ago resulted. She was very stylish and good looking and was one of Cumberland's most popular young ladies. Her father conducts a large grocery store in South Cumberland.

Mr. Twigg was a widower. He telephoned his fiancée from Keyser that he would be down on the noon train Saturday. He went to the Blosser home with the wedding ring. The couple were in the parlor alone from 1 until about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Members of the family heard them chatting merrily. At about 2 o'clock Miss Blosser telephoned a girl friend about the coming wedding. Soon after this all was still, but no attention was paid to them by the family.

Mr. Twigg was about 33 years old. His wife died about a year after their marriage, which occurred four years ago. Twigg is said to have been worth about $50,000. He owned a large general store at Keyser; a fine concrete dwelling at the same place, into which he intended to take his bride after a Southern tour, and a large peach orchard from which he yielded large revenue the season just closed.

PAPER STOLEN

Prothonotary Guyer Makes Reply to Gazette Editorial.

Bedford, Pa., January 5, 1911. To the Editor Bedford Gazette, Bedford, Pa.

Dear Sir:—In your issue of last week you said your columns were open for an explanation as to the whereabouts of the "Campaign Expense Account" of Hon. William C. Miller, Treasurer of the Republican County Committee. I wish to answer as follows:

On December 7, 1910, Dr. Miller, in person, brought the account, to my office for filing, then asked if he might take it to his office to make a copy of parts of it, as those parts were illegibly written. I granted him the privilege, and a few days later I went to his office, myself, and got the account and placed it in the proper file in my office, and some one has removed it. Dr. Miller says he does not know who removed it, or where it is. I hope this will explain the matter in a satisfactory manner.

I wish to state further with reference to the removing of various papers from the vault: It has been the custom here for years when an attorney wished to see a certain paper, he would simply go and get it and when he was through with it return it to its place, which I think is all perfectly right, as I certainly think we should have that much confidence and respect for our attorneys at the Bar.

Yours very truly,

A. S. GUYER, Prothy.

HOUSE ROBBED

Burglars Secured Money, Watch and Clothes Sunday Night.

Last Sunday night burglars entered the home of Frank E. Naus, East Penn Street, and stole a gold watch, between eight and nine dollars in money and a coat and vest.

They entered through the cellar and ransacked the whole first floor of the house. They took time to feast upon what they found in the pantry. Burnt matches were found scattered about the house and a black mask was left behind by the intruders. What might a bloodhound have done next morning?

THE NEW YEAR COMETH

This is the time of sadness and farewell, The time of welcome and of new delight; The old year drifts upon the wind tonight Into the limbo where the dead years dwell.

From some strange, distant bourne no tongue can tell, O'er moonlit ways and paved with shining white,

The new, swift-footed year—a vision bright— Comes at the clamor of the old year's knell!

Time turns his glass! The sands full slowly run, Freightened, in each dropped grain, with memory—

The failures wrought, the few successes won! I cry, "O time, what brings the new for men?"

The brave-tongued bells peal answer back to me, "A chance to fail; a chance to try again!"

Tolstoy and His Daughter at Work in the Harvest Field

Jane Addams, in her account in the January McClure's of "A Visit to Tolstoy," tells how Tolstoy puts into practice his belief in "bread labor" and the personal effort:

"At the long dinner-table, laid in the garden, were the various traveling guests, the grown-up daughters, and the younger children with their governess. The Countess presided over the usual European dinner, served by men; but the Count and the daughter who had worked all day in the fields ate only porridge and black bread, and drank only kvass, the fare of the hay-making peasants. Of course, we are all accustomed to the fact that those who perform the heaviest labor eat the coarsest and simplest fare at the end of the day; but it is not often that we sit at the same table with them, while we ourselves eat the more elaborate food prepared by some one else's labor. Tolstoy ate his simple supper without remark or comment upon the food his family and guests preferred to eat, assuming that they, as well as he, had settled the matter with their own consciences."

An Evening on the Desert with the Prophet Mohammed

"It was now evening, and it was decided that the two caravans should camp together—an arrangement which was the more welcome as we were by no means sure that we had seen the last of the marauders. I had invited the leader of the Arabs to have supper with me, and, after a long exercise of prayer with his followers, he came to join me, but my attempt at hospitality was thrown away—for he would not touch the excellent wine which I had unpacked for him, nor would he eat any of my dainties, contenting himself with stale bread, dried dates, and water. After this meal we sat alone by the smoldering fire, the magnificent arch of the heavens above us of that deep, rich blue with those gleaming, clear-cut stars which can only be seen in that dry desert air. Our camp lay in silence before us, and no sound reached our ears save the dull murmur of the voices of our companions, and the occasional shrill cry of a jackal among the sandhills around us. Face to face I sat with this strange man, the glow of the fire beating upon his eager and imperious features and reflecting from his passionate eyes. It was the strangest vigil, and one which will never pass from my recollection. I have spoken with many wise and famous men upon my travels, but never with one who left the impression of this one."

"And yet much of his talk was unintelligible to me, though, as you are aware, I speak Arabian like an Arab. It rose and fell in the strangest way. Sometimes it was the babble of a child, sometimes the incoherent raving of a fanatic, sometimes the lofty dreams of a prophet and philosopher. There were times when his stories of demons, of miracles, of dreams, and of omens were such as an old woman might tell to please the children of an evening. There were others when, as he talked with shining face of his converse with angels, of the intentions of the Creator, and the end of the universe, I felt as if I were in the company of some one more than mortal, some one who was indeed the direct messenger of the Most High."

Criticism

Art unquestionably preceded criticism, but it is safe to assume that the first artist was closely pursued by the first critic—and may even have murdered him expeditiously with a convenient boulder. There is no proof of this crime, but in the rough beginnings of civilization, it is eminently probable. The belief in some quarters that critics are always throwing stones may perhaps be due to the immediate efforts of the second critic to avenge the first. And the bitter acquiescence of artists in the existence of critics is possibly also traceable to the discovery of the first artist that there is always another critic.

The critic is embodied tradition. Few agree with him, many scoff at him, but all secretly respect and fear him. His existence alone establishes art as a calling of equal dignity with the other professions; for it is an essential element in art that the result should appear easy, and were it not for the critic, none but the artist would realize that it is actually difficult. It is he alone who forces upon the world in general the unwilling belief that art contains many elements that can be appreciated only by paying it the compliment of serious and intelligent study.

The critic is both born and made. He must combine instinct with experience, and experience with cultivation. The very persons who scoff at him and say that art is "all a matter of taste" (to which wit and wisdom once combined the answer, "Yes, good taste—and bad taste") read criticisms as a daily habit. That is why, in an age of so many newspapers and magazines, there are so many persons who write criticisms—and so few critics.—Ralph W. Bergengren in January Lippincott's.

Pests on House Plants

As a guide to the owners of house plants infested with soft scale insects the following letter by Prof. H. A. Surface, State Zoologist, Harrisburg, to a Chester County correspondent will be interesting and valuable:

"The scale of the begonia is known as the Soft Scale, which proves to be quite a nuisance when not suppressed. It is destroyed comparatively easily by making a fairly strong solution of Ivory soap in slightly warm rain water, and adding to this a little ammonia, and sponging the leaves and stems of the infested plants with a soft sponge dipped into this solution. It will loosen and remove the scales. This may need to be repeated at intervals of three or four days, but it is one of the best means of keeping the pests in check.

"This treatment can be used for pests of various kinds on household plants, and it will generally give good results. There is no exact formula as to the amount of soap and ammonia to use. Sometimes when the leaves of house plants or the fronds of ferns are very badly infested with scale, it is advisable to cut them off and burn them, and by the use of a teaspoonful of nitrate of soda in each gallon of water, stimulate the growth of the plants and the formation of new leaves, which will not be so badly infested, and consequently more vigorous and beautiful."

THE STONE RIVER OF ZUNI

A Great Stream of Moulten Rock, Once a River of Fire, Now a Black Flood of Everlasting Stone.

(Written for The Gazette by M. J. Brown, Editor Little Valley, N. Y., Hub.)

If I were a boy, knowing what I now know of some of the wonders of our country, or having the means that every high school boy now has to learn what and where these wonders are, I would make it the main ambition of my young manhood to see some of the grand sights that Nature has made for us to see, and the many strange people and places that are right here in the country where I was born.

There is hardly a young man in New York State today but who might see some of these wonder places and people, if he would—if he would consider it as a part of his education, and work for it as he would for his graduation.

But how pitifully few of us know of our wonderful land, and how few take any interest in it outside of pointing to our marvelous growth to 93,000,000 people, and to some of the modern wonders of our cities. The time may come when Americans will know America, and when they do, they will not crowd the steamers to see the wonders of an old world that do not or cannot compare with the wonders at home.

Now let me tell you of one of many like wonders that I saw last month, a sight worthy of a long trip to see—one that has laid out there and waited for you for countless centuries, and you never heard of it even.

And yet you know a lot about Africa, of Pompeii and the old world's wonders.

If you'll follow the Santa Fe's main line to the coast on your map, you will find a station pretty well out to the Arizona line, marked McCarty's. It looks like some town on the map, and it is as big on paper as it will ever be on earth. If you should ever go there, don't try for advance hotel accommodations nor don't try to find the place in a hotel directory. Just get off the train and take what there is. And by the way, nature has hidden most of her southwest wonders in places where you will certainly have to tough it some if you visit them, but I have yet to find a place worth seeing but where a white man could get enough to eat and a safe place to sleep, if he acted like a white man.

McCarty's is a store, an Indian trading store, and it is also, station and postoffice. Back of it, on the edge of the cliff are a dozen or more Indian stone houses. And that is all there is or ever will be, of a town, for the land is a barren, lonesome waste—a country that was burned dry thousands of years ago and always will be dry.

But right near this little desert station ends a great river—a wonderful river that has no mouth—a river nearly sixty miles long that once rose in the Zuni Mountains, flowed its snaky way to this spot, and stopped.

It's a river of lava, a river of stone—of black glass.

Thousands of years ago, when this land was heaved up by the fires within, a great crater opened in the Zuni Mountains and a Niagara of fire escaped—a river of moulten rock that ran for nearly sixty miles before it cooled and became stone.

And here at McCarty's was its end, an abrupt end. It simply stopped, the flow was exhausted.

Let me try to tell you something of this strange, wild sight—a sight, like all the wonders of the southwest, wonderful to see but so hard to portray.

Like a great river it winds across the desert plains, and rises from twenty to thirty feet above the ground it once ran on. This river of

THERE'S NO RISK

If This Medicine Does Not Benefit You Pay Nothing.

A physician who made a specialty of stomach troubles, particularly dyspepsia, after years of study perfected the formula from which Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are made.

Our experience with Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets leads us to believe them to be the greatest remedy known for the relief of acute indigestion and chronic dyspepsia. Their ingredients are soothing and healing to the inflamed membranes of the stomach. They are rich in pepsin, one of the greatest digestive aids known to medicine. The relief they afford is almost immediate. Their use with persistency and regularity for a short time brings about a cessation of the pains caused by stomach disorders.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets will insure healthy appetite, aid digestion and promote nutrition. As evidence of our sincere faith in Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, we ask you to try them at our risk. If they do not give you entire satisfaction, we will return you the money you paid us for them, without question or formality. They come in three sizes, prices 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain them only at—The Rexall Store, F. W. Jordan.

melted stone, cooling as it left its crater, became thick and sluggish as it ran on, and its middle became higher than its sides, because its sides cooled, then the middle sloped over and cooled down the sides, and all the while its bed rose higher, and the shell became thicker, until there finally became a complete shell or great tube, inside which the uncooled lava ran.

And one day the eruption ceased, the everlasting cooling commenced, and this great river turned to stone—to last as long as stone lasts.

I followed the river for miles, on foot, not walking on it, but beside it. Why I did not walk on it I will tell you later. At places I would find this black river literally blown to fragments, as if the stone bed had been broken up and run through a stone crusher. In the days this river ran and cooled—the outside cooled and formed a shell, gas and steam were imprisoned and when the pressure was too great, terrible explosions happened and this river was scattered over many acres with fine fragments of almost glass, and so sharp-pointed that they would cut a pair of strong shoes to strips in a half hour.

This great river, as one goes up toward its head, becomes wider and wider, from a quarter to a half mile in width, and there are low places where it simply spread out into a great lake and only left it and continued its sluggish flow when the sink in the ground had been filled with the lava to the level and the stream was forced on again.

In one place I found a strange freak where this river had actually run up a grade before the sluggish mess was forced to bend and find the country's level.

There are caves in this black mass, caves formed by air bubbles and large enough to camp in, and these bubbles are the homes of several kinds of dangerous wild beasts, which find safety from the hunter there.

For miles this river is as smooth and black as coal, then broken to fragments, and filled with great fissures. None but cushioned feet can walk on these sharp-pointed fragments. A horse's hoofs would not last two hours for the glass-like lava would wear them away.

The trader at the store told me that up near the head this frozen river had spread out, branched and enclosed an island of many thousand acres, that the enclosure was a large ranch, and that there was only one narrow and little known trail where

F. W. Jordan Sells Remarkable Catarrh Cure.

Pour a few drops of HYOMEI (pronounced High-o-me) into the hard rubber inhaler and you can then breathe into the lungs the very same antiseptic, germ killing air as you would breathe in the Australian forests of eucalyptus, where catarrh is unknown.

And HYOMEI is so pleasant to use, you'll like to use it; when you breathe it the effect on the inflamed catarrh infected and germ ridden membrane is soothing and healing.

In five minutes you get such wonderful relief that you will know that at last you have a cure for catarrh.

A HYOMEI outfit which consists of one bottle of HYOMEI, a hard rubber pocket inhaler, a medicine dropper and simple instructions for use, costs only $1.00, and extra bottles of HYOMEI, if afterward needed, cost only 50 cents.

HYOMEI is guaranteed to cure catarrh, asthma, croup, bronchitis, coughs, colds, sore throat, or money back. HYOMEI is sold by F. W. Jordan and leading druggists everywhere.

one could cross this lava flow, and that it was utterly impossible for man or beast to cross it any other place.

It's a wonderful sight now, this river that has been dead for countless centuries, but I could not but wonder what an awful sight it must have been when it crawled along over these plains a live river of fire, and burned this country to the sky—so dry that the atmosphere feels it to this day.

For several miles the river runs along the side of the Santa Fe's road, and how few who see it from the car windows know what it is.

I was riding on the rear of an observation car when we passed this river, talking with a man who was on his way home from a trip around the world. At least so he stated, and in the Pullman he kept his suit case, plastered with the labels of many countries, out where we could all see it.

As we passed this river, one of America's wonders, it seemed to slightly attract the world-trotter's interest and he said it resembled lava—the lava he had seen at Vesuvius.

This man went on to his home to tell the people of the wonders of Pompeii. I got off at little old McCarty's.

This famous traveler had his grip plastered with the custom house labels of many countries. Mine had an Albuquerque parcel check on it. He told me his trip cost him three thousand dollars. Mine cost me three hundred—and I got more than he got, for I got off at McCarty's and learned something new of America.

To give you some little idea of the magnitude of this flow of melted rock that old earth vomited up centuries ago, I was told that it covers about four hundred square miles. Just conceive this, if you can grasp it. Think of the awful flood and the heat.

I was alone on my trip up this river and I much regretted that I did not have some one with me who could explain some of the curious places I saw, and on my return I had but a few minutes before train time, too short a time to get the desired explanations.

I remember in one place a little stream of water ran directly through a branch of this stone river. The lava flow seems to have parted and let the little stream through. It did not seem possible that water could have absolutely worn a clean channel through this hardened flow, but a channel it had, and how it got it is another of the many strange ones I pass up.

Next week I will write of The Dry Land and tell you something about a desert here at home, a waste more fearful than the desert of Sahara, and of the details one cannot get from a Pullman car window.

And then will come three or more letters from Zuni, from remote, unknown Zuni, the most fascinating, gruesome, wonderful and barbarous community that could possibly be hidden in any white man's country.

Foley's Kidney Remedy—An Appreciation

L. McConnell, Catherine St., Elmira, N. Y., writes: "I wish to express my appreciation of the great good I derived from Foley's Kidney Remedy, which I used for a bad case of kidney trouble. Five bottles did the work most effectively and proved to me beyond doubt it is the most reliable kidney medicine I have ever taken." E. D. Heckerman.

The Bedford Gazette is a model among country newspapers.—New York World.

The Gazette is the leading newspaper of Bedford County and its circulation is far ahead of any of its contemporaries. As an advertising medium it is one of the best in this part of the state.

Regular subscription price per year $1.50, payable in advance. Cards of Thanks, 50c; Resolutions, 10c.

Gazette Publishing Co.,
Bedford, Pa.

FRIDAY MORNING, JAN. 6, 1911.

Speaker John F. Cox is not consistent. He occupied much time in delivering his address to the House at Harrisburg on his being re-elected but he would not allow our Representative to tell the House why he voted as he did on the Fair Local Option bill at the last session, and many of our people don't know the reason to this day, though not all.

THINK IT OVER

There is a move on foot to organize a company and erect a canning factory in or near Bedford. Though the movement is yet in its infancy it is worthy of careful consideration. It certainly would benefit those farmers within a radius of a number of miles if they can make more per acre from their land by raising tomatoes, beans, peas and such other products as would be consumed, than by growing corn or wheat.

It would give employment to local people for several months in the year, and, being strictly local, it would benefit the community by bringing in money.

Small industries of this nature are more likely to locate here than large ones, and this matter is certainly worthy of careful consideration by every farmer in the community.

MR. GUYER'S REPLY

Elsewhere in this issue appears a reply to The Gazette's editorial of last week concerning that missing "filed" paper by Prothonotary Guyer, which is self-explanatory. Mr. Guyer admits allowing the paper to be taken out immediately after being filed for revision, and at noon on Thursday of last week, December 29, 1910, while a representative of The Gazette was searching for the missing scroll he was told by Mr. Guyer that it was not there; that it had not been returned by the Treasurer of the Republican County Committee and that he intended to go after it.

Thus is the book closed, the scroll rolled together and the purpose of the law thwarted.

But where, oh where is the paper?

In conclusion Mr. Guyer states: "I certainly think we should have that much confidence and respect for our Attorneys at the Bar." But who knows that it was taken by an Attorney? It looks as though its resting place will ever remain a secret; the voters of the county will neither note nor remember "what was writ there."

One thing, however, is plain and that is that county officials need iron in their blood sufficient to protect public documents.

THE "BIG STICK" BROKEN

The unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, handed down on Tuesday in the Government's libel suit against the New York World, shattered to splinters the "big stick" of Teddy and placed the stamp of approval upon the freedom of the press.

This suit was instituted during or just after the last Presidential campaign by Government officials at the behest of Theodore Roosevelt, then Chief Executive. The complaint was against articles published by The World concerning the purchase by the Government of the holdings of the old De Lesseps Panama Canal Company, from another company which had secured title for $40,000,000, when it had been offered by the original company to our Government for $6,000,000. The articles also brought out the facts that our engineers had recommended the Nicaragua route; that one William Nelson Cromwell, attorney for the new company, went to the Panama and stirred up something that had little semblance of a revolution; that at this opportune moment U. S. gunboats were on the scene, and that our Government recognized the independence of Panama, contrary to accepted International Law which forbids the recognition as an independent nation a rebellious section of a country until such rebellious section shall have demonstrated its ability to maintain its independence.

The Government claimed jurisdiction on the ground that the articles had been circulated on Federal territory—the New York postoffice and at West Point. Judge Hough, when the case came to trial decided that the Federal Court did not have jurisdiction, and thus the matter rested until the decision of the Highest Tribunal of the land affirmed the action of the Court below, in the unanimous decision handed down on Tuesday.

The line of defense taken by The World was forced upon it by the manner in which the Government brought the suit. It was The World's intention to show justification of the articles, and now that the matter of jurisdiction is settled, The World will ask Congress to investigate the matter of the mysterious selection and purchase of the Panama route.

One thing is forever settled and that is that the Government can't transport editors of papers from any section of the country to Washington for trial under an old law that existed in what is now the District of Columbia when it was a territorial possession of a foreign country. The freedom of the press is assured, and editors are answerable for articles they print to the courts of the states in which they are printed. The result of an investigation by Congress is anxiously awaited.

$100 Reward, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundations of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address: F. J. Pastor Surprised

Trinity congregation of Friend's Cove Reformed pastorate have a quiet way of doing some things. On Thursday, December 29, while the dominie and his wife were trying to put some finishing touches to the new parsonage, a number of sleds laden with families from this congregation came to spend a social hour with us.

We had been somewhat accustomed to surprises for a few days prior to this, as the boys and girls frequently called upon us, dressed in fantastic style, so that we were in a measure prepared. But the greatest surprise was yet to come; they brought with them and left for the use of the culinary department of the parsonage all such things as go towards storing the larder; even "Pet," the family trotter, was not forgotten.

But another surprise was in store for us, and was sure to follow upon the heels of the former. On the evening of the same day twenty ladies and gentlemen from the town of Rainsburg dropped in upon us to spend the evening. It was a significant fact that these two surprises came on the birthday of the parson's wife.

The crowd from Rainsburg was chaperoned by the genial D. F. Reighard, whilst Fritz Statler gave them all the fun they wanted, and J. B. Cessna, Elias Clouse and Mr. Hartsock took care of the ladies.

They brought with them two gallons of oysters in order that a supper might be indulged in, and it was a happy thought on their part to bring with them Dr. Lessig who would look after the needs and wants of those who might overeat themselves. A very enjoyable evening was spent. A marked feature of the crowd was that it represented all the different denominations of that town, which speaks well for feeling of denominational unity. Such occasions are oases in the life of the overworked country pastor, and mean very much to him. They are love tokens that will not be forgotten.

A FOOTBALL GIANT

And How He Was Inspired to Win a Champion Game.

By ARNOLD TRACY.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

"I have called," said Captain Ben Tucker of the Parkington football team to Miss Ethel Storm, "on a matter of a very delicate nature."

"Indeed," said Miss Storm, opening a pair of big brown eyes enlaid by long black lashes.

"Yes, extremely delicate. Indeed, I scarcely know how to begin."

There was a pause, during which Captain Tucker was pumping up his courage, or, rather, hunting for a way to state his case, that would be least offensive. Finally, with a last abem, he went on:

"You are aware, I suppose, that in a few days our team meets the Stanwigs team in a final try for the season's championship."

"I am."

"You may be also aware that there is one man on whom depends our success or failure."

"Who is this Ajax?"

"Perhaps you have heard of Miles Stanford?"

"I am acquainted with him."

"I am pleased that you admit the acquaintance. It is a step forward. Now we shall get on. Mr. Stanford is suffering from a mental malady which renders him unfit for putting forth his best efforts on the gridiron. Though the game is near at hand, I can't get him to practice with any spirit. He gets the signals mixed, doesn't remember anything he is told, and often when he might seize the ball and carry it, untackled to goal he stands on the field in a day dream. When I shout to him he starts, as if suddenly awakened."

"And may I ask," said the girl, opening wide her beautiful eyes, "what all this has to do with me?"

"Captain Tucker, having led up to the subject in question, being now face to face with it, was abashed. The girl would not aid him."

"He's dead in love with you, and you are standing him off. Why the dickens can't you give him a sop till after the game? Then, I don't care what you do with him."

"Miss Storm controlled a desire to laugh. The affair, between the petite Miss Storm and the gigantic Mr. Stanford was being watched by the numerous friends of both with interest and amusement. And just before the big game was to come off, as bad luck would have it, Stanford had taken it into his head to propose to her and she had cast him into a slough of despondency by refusing him.

"Mr. Tucker," she said gravely, "are you aware of the breach you are making off?"

"Oh, for heaven's sake, don't play me I'm not in that game at all. Just now I'm absorbed in winning this match between our team and the Stanwigs. If you don't help us or stop standing in our way, whichever you choose to call it, the jig's up. We can't beat them with Stanford in his present condition, and if you'll only go soft on him for three days the championship will be ours."

The girl stood looking at him with an expression that neither he nor any one else could read. The expression on his own face was one of infinite vexation.

"Mr. Tucker," she said at last, "overrate my influence with Mr. Stanford. I should be happy to aid it were it in my power, but not by Mr. Stanford is his own."

This was said with such a pursing of the lips and such a frowning of the brow that Tucker felt that he was trespassing upon her private affairs and trust you will consider interest in the coming match, as well as the good of the whole team, an excuse and forgive me."

"You are forgiven," said Miss Storm, putting off her hand.

Tucker grasped it thankfully and in his gratitude for being forgiven, squeezed it so hard in his brawny fist that he called forth a cry and was obliged to ask to be forgiven again. Then he went away feeling that he had failed in his mission and the championship was as good as lost.

During the next few days the captain nourished a faint hope that after all Miss Storm would relent and he would notice in the practice games a change for the better in Stanford

But the great bulk of a man lumbered over the field like a ship in the rollers without a breeze.

There was nothing to do but play the game and take the consequences. The captain and all the team expected that their enemies would have a walk-over. But what could they do? Stanford would not only fail to be the tower of strength to them he should be, but was liable to be a positive injury. Every man of the team went on the gridiron with despair written in his face. The Stanwigs, on the contrary, had got wind of the fact that something was wrong with their opponents and were buoyed with hope.

The consequence was that during the first half the Parkingtons did themselves great injustice, while the Stanwigs played better than they had ever played before. Tucker just before the game opened had sworn like a trooper at Stanford, using terms of sovereign contempt, hoping to touch his pride. It had simply concentrated his attention on the game sufficiently to prevent his making any blunders.

The second half was about to begin, with 6 to 0 in favor of the Stanwigs, when Captain Tucker heard a voice behind him say:

"A lady at the grand stand wants to see you, Stanford."

Turning, Tucker saw Stanford walk away.

"Come back here!" shouted the captain of the Stanwigs. "Time's called."

"Go on!" thundered Tucker.

Stanford proceeded, watched by his captain. Tucker saw him go to the grand stand, and on drawing near it he was beckoned to by Miss Storm.

"Great heavens!" muttered Tucker. "Can it be that she's going to set him up?"

He saw Miss Storm smile on Stanford, whisper something to him, give him her hand and send him away. The big man came, running, with the lightness of a gazelle on to the field. Tucker passed the word among his team, that something had happened, and they lined up with a supreme confidence, every man in condition to do his best.

Strange it is, how under certain circumstances what is not known becomes known. It was probably not five minutes between the reception of Stanford's summons and the beginning of the second half, yet it was known everywhere on the oval that a change had come over the conditions pertaining to the game. In the first place, a large number of Miss Storm's friends sitting about her, saw Stanford approach her, listen to her whispered words and receive the pressure of her little hand. They saw, too, a sudden gust of joy sweep over his face. Then they followed him with their eyes as he bounded toward the center of the gridiron. The news was disseminated by a hundred voices, which in turn told it to a hundred more, and so on till it was common property that a great advantage had come to the Parkingtons. What that advantage was only the inner circle knew. Parkington rooters yelled themselves hoarse; Stanwigs rooters' voices seemed to have been smothered.

"What is it, Stanford?" Tucker asked just before the ball was put in play.

"If this game is won," replied the Hercules, "I'm in paradise; if it is lost I'm in the other place."

"Then it's won, by thunder!"

From the reopening of the game Stanford, who had during the first half attracted attention because of the uselessness of a man who might be infinitely useful, converged the eyes of all present. Scarcely had the game recommenced when he got possession of the ball, and, warding off a tackle on his right with his free arm and launching his ponderous body on another tackle, he got beyond the enemy's line and, like a mountain suddenly equipped with wings, flew to goal.

Again, when two wedges were ramming each other, Stanford by what seemed the effort of a Titan forced his way through the mass before him and with a few contortions ridding himself of the clingers made a side run and another touchdown.

The yell that went up from the rooters of both sides was like a dozen thunderstorms.

And so the game went on. In half an hour the score, which had been 0 to 0 for the Stanwigs, stood 12 to 6 for the Parkingtons. Stanford, who considered the game won, permitted his mind to drift upon the blessedness in store for him. One of the enemy, taking advantage of his inattention, passed the ball to another, who passed it to a third, and this man took it to goal.

"Wake up!" yelled the Parkington rooters.

Stanford did wake up and, since there were but eight minutes left, made the best use of them. As if to atone for her negligence, he swung himself about, his enemies going down before him like pygmies. Finally, when time was called the game stood 14 to 10 in favor of the Parkingtons.

Hercules, instead of bearing the world on his shoulders, was borne on the shoulders of the world. Stanford was carried off the field by his comrades amid the confusion of a breaking in on the gridiron by a multitude of spectators.

Captain Tucker considered what could with propriety be done to show Miss Storm the appreciation of himself and his team for having saved the game. He had met with an icy reception on trespassing on her private affairs and had no mind to trespass again. He called a meeting of the team and asked for suggestions. The result of the deliberations was that the same evening Miss Storm received a box inland with mother-of-pearl containing ten pounds of candy. Nothing to mark the donor accompanied it, but Miss Storm knew very well that it was the gift of the winning team.

THE LAST FANCY.

Ceramic Collectors Are Now Searching For Old Jugs.

OLD ENGLISH JUGS.

If you have a fancy for collecting ceramics you will now be eagerly searching in every likely and unlikely place for old English jugs. The Staffordshire makers turned out many of these jugs and drinking cups in old effects modeled after trophies of the hunting field and of objects in daily use. The toby jug illustrated is the "find" most often secured.

Big Hats May Produce Baldness.

London, never as exaggerated as America's metropolis in the matter of feminine fashions, nevertheless finally has fallen victim to the enormous hats of straw or lace affected by summer-gowned womankind. Not only do the English newspapers and periodicals denounce the huge specimens of millinery worn by women of the smart set, but they even invent hygienic reasons to prove the evil of this type of headwear. One west end hairdresser, for instance, has taken it on himself to denounce publicly and in no measured tone the effect such hats have on their wearers' tresses. "As grass turns yellow under a mushroom so women's hair will lose its color and deteriorate under the gigantic hats which are now the mode," says this specialist. "There is every possibility of the fair sex going bald unless a revolution in hats is effected. First of all, these enormous mountains of millinery shut out the health giving sun and air; secondly, they present such vast surfaces to the wind that they tug against the detaining hatpins like a kite on a string."

Value of Alaskan Mineral Output

The value of the mineral output of Alaska in 1910 is estimated at $17,400,000, the value in 1909 was $21,146,423. Of this, the estimated value of the gold output in 1910 was $16,360,000, that of 1909, $20,371,075. The copper production in 1910 is estimated to have been 5,600,000 pounds, valued at about $740,000; that of 1909 was 4,124,705 pounds, valued at $536,211. The value of the other mineral products, including silver, lead, gypsum, marble, and coal, is estimated at $300,000—an increase over that of 1909.

The total value of the Alaskan mineral production since 1880, when mining was begun, is, in round numbers, $186,000,000, of which $179,000,000 is represented by the value of the gold output.

Brooklyn, N. Y., January 1.—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle addressed a large congregation in the Brooklyn Academy of Music this afternoon on the importance of good courage for the New Year, from the following text:

"Fear not, for I have redeemed thee; I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine."—Isaiah xliii, 1.

As usual he had a large audience and the very closest attention. He said in part:

Fear is a great calamity. It is closely related to all the sorrows of life, closely linked to all the crimes of the world! One of the blessings of true Christianity is the release it gives from fear. But alas! true Christianity, true Christian faith, and the present rewards of these are not very common even in Christendom. Few know the meaning of the Master's words, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Few appreciate the assurance, "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed" (Matthew xi, 28; John viii, 36).

Fear has its foundation in sin. We may be sure that the angels in heaven know no fear. After Adam had disobeyed the Divine command in Eden, he feared his Maker and hid from him. Similarly, fear affects all of Adam's posterity, because of the general realization that "all are sinners." God and his righteousness are, figuratively, light, and the sinner and his sins are, figuratively, darkness. There is no compromise—the darkness hateth (oppose) the light, the light scattereth the darkness. Love and reverence go hand in hand, but love and fear are opposites; we cannot love that which we fear, we do not fear that which we love.

Fear, Worry, Sickness

Hope, pride and ambition encourage the business man and the laborer, the king and the peasant, the housewife and the maid, the leaders of the social set and the patient mother. Nevertheless, all of these have a drag- anchor of fear, which in the stress of life produces worry; worry produces indigestion, indigestion produces insomnia and nervousness which lead on to every form of disease and unhappiness. To the extent, therefore, that fear is removed, health and happiness are encouraged and aided.

All physicians recognize the fact that fear is closely related to disease. Hence the wise physician always counsels cheerful surroundings for the sick, cheerful conversation, diversion of the mind, the avoidance of thought along worrisome lines—the rest cure, etc.

It may be asked, Why is it that the Master's cure is little considered today? Why are so few pointed to Christ, the Great Physician, for the rest and peace and comfort and joy which he promised to his followers eighteen centuries ago? Have his words proven untrue? Are his professed followers amongst the most anxious and troubled and overcharged and sick and sorrowing and fearful of our poor, groaning creation? If so, what is the explanation? We must concede the inference. We must admit that the four hundred millions of professed Christians are much more unhappy, much more fearful, much more nervous, peevish and sickly than the twelve hundred millions outside of Christendom.

The explanation of this peculiar situation is that Christendom is not Christian; that the name Christendom does not prevail amongst the civilized one-fourth of humanity. For centuries now Christendom has deceived itself, and has seriously misrepresented Christ, his teachings and his promised Kingdom of righteousness for which still we are praying, "Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done on earth." Our standing armies, prepared to destroy each other; and our Dreadnaught navies, prepared to blow each other to atoms; and our submarines and our flying machines, our great cannons and torpedoes—all prove the mistake of calling human civilization Christ's Kingdom.

Similarly, the worry, fear, strife, nervousness, etc., of Christendom all prove that the Great Teacher's antidote for fear and worry has not been taken by the masses of Christendom. We hold that the Good Physician's remedy for sin, corroding care, worry, fear, is just as effective today as it was eighteen and a half centuries ago; we hold that the real difficulty is that his prescription has not been faithfully followed. We urge that those who now have "an ear to hear" his message should accept it faithfully, and that they should not accept it at the hands of anybody another prescription, said to be "just as good." We should make sure that we get the remedy which bears the endorsement of the Lord's Word, and which has the seal of "the precious blood."

The Master's Teachings Perverted

During the Dark Ages superstitious fear was encouraged, all will concede. The attempt was made to drive humanity to God. Afrocious doctrines were promulgated in the name of God, Christ and his Apostles. St. Paul denominates these "doctrines of demons" (I Timothy iv, 1). These, primarily, taught a Purgatory, to be mitigated by prayers and masses. Under the impulse of fear, millions accepted Christ and professed discipleship, in total ignorance of his real teachings, and yet no more his followers than when they were heathen. Later on the Adversary partially sidetracked the Reformation Movement by leading zealous people to renounce Purgatory as unscriptural and to accept in its stead for the world at large eternal torment—a still more unscriptural proposition—a still more God-dishonoring doctrine of demons.

Fortunately for ourselves we Protestants do not take our own doctrine seriously. However much all Protestant Creeds assert that only baptized saints will reach heaven and, contrariwise, that all the unsaintly will suffer eternal torture, nevertheless, not one in a hundred believes this. The most saintly, the most conscientious of them are troubled by their fears, tormented by their sympathies, perplexed to understand God's dealings, hindered from having the peace and joy which the Master promised his followers. The less conscientious of them stifle conscience to their own injury, gradually losing faith in the Word of God because of this error. They thus escape some of the torments of fear, but they do not attain the love, joy, contentment and peace which the Master promised his faithful ones.

Unreliable Subterfuge Harmful

There is only the one Divine remedy for this harmful fear. That remedy is associated with the Gospel of Christ; but there are numerous subterfuges. Some drown their fears, disappointments and sorrows with alcohol or various narcotics. Some seek to drown them with sensuous pleasures, some with business activity, some with church activity, some with "devil-may-care" unreason. Of late a considerable degree of subterfuge success has come along the lines of deceit—denying the existence of sin, denying the facts of pain and sorrow and death and, contrariwise, affirming that everything is good, regardless of the untruthfulness of this proposition.

The result of this self-deception indeed relieves from a considerable measure of fear. To this extent it proves a solace and satisfaction; but it is a subterfuge and not the true remedy. As a proposition its influence upon the mind, upon the reasoning faculties, is injurious. The twisting of reason necessary to this philosophy, which calls black white, and plain pleasure, and sin righteousness, is destructive of sound reasoning ability. The habit of perversion necessary to the calling of bad good and wrong right not only injures the mind, but, in attempting to sustain itself from the Scriptures, perverts the entire Word of God. Divine Antidote For Fear God's message through the Law and the Prophets, to Israel, as interpreted by Jesus and his Apostles, gives us the true antidote for fear. It does not deny sin, sickness, sorrow, death; it denies no fact, but it does hold out a remedy for all of these, an antidote, "the balm of Gilead." Moreover, it informs us that this antidote can be received only through the co-operation of our heads and hearts.

It informs us that this healing is obtainable by only a comparatively few at this time, but, eventually, the Divine blessings, world-wide, shall operate toward all humanity as fully as have the penalties of sin. It applies now (in full degree) only to such as have the hearing ear, the eye of faith and the appreciative, responsive heart. Others may obtain a measure only of this consolation. The Great Teacher gave us the key to this deliverance from fear, saying, "Ye shall know the Truth and the Truth shall make you free. If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed" (John viii, 32, 36).

The first step toward having the Truth make us free is to have the coating of ignorance and superstition removed and this is a difficult matter. For instance, the Catholic superstition of Purgatory and the Protestant superstition of eternal torment, for practically all mankind, have been so thoroughly riveted upon their faithful that to break their bonds and get free is a difficult task. Only those who hunger and thirst after the Lord and his righteousness are in any likelihood of ever being properly freed.

Others getting free from one error are merely steered by the Adversary into another as bad or worse. God seeketh not these at the present time; he will deal with them by and by under Messiah's glorious Kingdom, when Satan shall be bound. Now, as the Apostle declares, "God seeketh such to worship him as worship him in spirit and in truth." "The secret of the Lord is with them that reverence him and he will show them his Covenant"—he will set them free now from the bondage of superstition and fear, and by and by, in the "First Resurrection," he will free them from the body of corruption

In other words, at the present time all humanity may receive a blessing of heart consolation in proportion as they can come to the knowledge of Divine Truth; and each will be helped to the knowledge of the truth in proportion to his hunger and thirst after righteousness—his honesty of soul. The dishonest-hearted are not worthy of being set free from fear. Liberty and freedom from fear for these would not be favorable to them nor to others under present conditions. Fear is associated with alienation from God. And, as the Bible declares, "None of the wicked shall understand" (Dan. xii, 10).

Mystery of the Gospel Age

To attain the highest blessing which God has to offer at the present time certain difficult requirements must be complied with. Sin must be repented of heartily, and, so far as possible, restitution must be made, which means that sin must be forsaken to the extent of ability. Faith must then recognize the "Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world"—that the sacrifice for sins was necessary, and that God himself provided it in the death of Jesus. Faith and knowledge must go further and not only see and acknowledge the death of the Redeemer, but also that God raised him from the dead and highly exalted him to spirit being again, to the intent that eventually he may accomplish for all mankind, the wonderful blessings foretold in the Law and the Prophets.

Additionally, to such will be revealed the great "Mystery" of this Gospel Age, lasting from the death of Jesus to the manifestation of Messiah in power and great glory as Michael—the "God-like One" (Daniel xii, 1). The Mystery is that Jesus is the Head, Chief, Lord, over the Church which is his Body, and that the "Body" members will eventually be glorified with the Head on the spirit plane; and that then Head and Body will constitute the great Messiah whose spiritual reign of a thousand years will result in the blessing and uplifting of mankind.

Whoever shall be thus taught of God in the school of Christ will learn also the necessity for having a share with the Master in his suffering and death, in order to have a share with him in his glorious reign. Those will be taught by the great Head that "if they suffer with him they shall reign with him" and that the sufferings of this present time (if faithfully endured by them) will work out an exceeding and abundant blessing.

The Sentiment of Our Text

To properly understand our text and, indeed, to understand the Bible as a whole, it is necessary to discern that God has foreordained two Israels—the earthly and the heavenly. Both are precious, both are to be used of the Lord during Messiah's Kingdom reign—the one on the heavenly plane and the other on the earthly. A mistake has been made by some in recognizing the earthly Israel and not recognizing the heavenly or spiritual Israel. Others have made the mistake of recognizing the heavenly or spiritual Israel and not recognizing the earthly Israel. "The promise of God is to be sure to both the seeds of Abraham—to that which is according to the promise, the oath—the Spiritual Seed—and also to that which is according to the Law, the natural seed (Romans iv, 16).

The Spiritual Seed must be developed first, because the blessing will proceed from the Heavenly Seed to the earthly seed, then from the earthly seed to all nations. The blessing upon all nations will consist of the opportunity that will be offered them of becoming members of the earthly seed which, ultimately, as the sands of the seashore, will include the saved of all nations—all found worthy of everlasting life. "I have constituted thee a father of many nations" (Rom iv, 17).

"Princes in All the Earth"

All who will come into this blessed experience, of relationship to God are described in our text, "Fear not! for I have redeemed thee; I have called thee by thy name, thou art mine." The faithful few of this Gospel Age, who have passed through the deep waters of tribulation and walked through fiery trials, have not only come off uninjured, but have been blessed, yea and will be abundantly blessed in the rewards of the coming Kingdom. They have naught to fear.

Similarly, Natural Israel as a people was specially favored from the days of Abraham down to the rejection of Messiah—particularly the saintly few of that people whose sure reward will be their privilege of being made Princes in all the earth by the great King of glory (Psalm xlv, 16).

Even during the Gospel Age when the nation of Israel, "Jacob," has been obliged to pass through trying experiences, "waters of affliction" and "fiery trials," the Lord has not forsaken them. He has kept them together as a people. He has not permitted them to be destroyed by their enemies. Their persistence for thirty-five centuries is of itself a miracle of Divine supervision. Without afflictions they would have disappeared as a distinct people.

As the Gospel Age (for the selection of Spiritual Israel) draws to a close, the voice of God is calling natural Israel and pointing them to the Land of Promise and reviving their hearts with the messages of their prophets.

All are to share God's blessings eventually, and then all may be without fear. Now is the time for those who know their God, to fear not. Now, those whose eyes of faith and understanding can discern God's stately steps amongst the children of men in the directing of the Divine Program may fearlessly rejoice. Now is the time for these to be of good courage! to fear not! to overcome the world! to be valiant for righteousness and truth! Their blessings of the Lord will be in proportion to their faithfulness and courage. There is no other route to the true rest and peace to which Jesus invites. And there never can be a better time than now to accept the Lord's offer: "Come unto me!"
